I spent many hours reading and discussing his work on the generation of consecutive primes. I still have a stack of his papers on my bookshelf. He was a very nice and brilliant guy.

Clayton was the salutatorian of the class of 1962, a group that had attended school together for most of our twelve years. All my memories of Clayton include his quiet, unassuming manner; his quest for excellence in all that he attempted; and his quick smile. I did not know that Clayton had served in the military, but I was not surprised that he had chosen to perform his patriotic duty. He was loved.
